

Which Voice Will You Listen To? — Graham Weaver

Stanford GSB Class of 2024 · Graduation Speech · 24 min

To live at full power, you must silence your voice of fear and follow your inner truth through three promises: remove what keeps you stuck, pursue what energizes you, and commit fully now.

The Two Voices

- We all have two competing internal forces: the survival instinct (voice of fear, doubt, anxiety, inner critic) that's loud and in your head, and your inner truth (intuition, soul, true self) that's quieter and shows up in your body—heart, gut, chest
- The voice of fear leads to a life that's too small. You already know this because you feel the dissonance and tension when doing something beneath you
- Your second voice contains your dreams, your path, your energy. When you stop denying who you really are, there's no limit to what you can accomplish
- Energy is the language of your soul—it doesn't use words, it uses your whole body to show you what matters

The meaning of life is to live your life at full power. That power is already inside you, accessed through your second voice.

Promise 2: Follow Your Energy

- Don't follow your passion—that implies one passion, knowing it at 28, doing it for 40 years. None of that is true. Even successful people didn't follow that path
- Instead, follow your energy. Whatever gives you energy right now is your soul talking to you. When you're excited about something, that's its voice
- Nine Lives Exercise: Imagine nine parallel lives starting today. Life 1 is your current path. Lives 2-9 must be things you're so excited about you'd jump out of bed to do them
- Two uses: (1) Pull something from another life into your current one to make your energy infectious. (2) Ask which life you'd choose if you knew you wouldn't fail—that's your richest dream, where you should eventually be
- The human soul needs something to hope for. Keep injecting it with energy

Living at Full Power

- You earned your seat through drive, motivation, persistence, willpower, character. You get to transport that to your next journey. Don't forget you get to bring you
- Energy is not exhaustible like willpower or fossil fuels—it's abundant. The more you give it away, the more you get back
- Your second voice will ruminate on problems, showing you what keeps you stuck and where to direct your power for biggest impact
- There aren't millions of decisions—there's really only one: Which voice will you listen to?

The meaning of life is for you to find your meaning of life. Mine is to live at full power—and that power is already inside you.

Promise 1: Take the Nail Out of Your Head

- Most of us walk around with an obvious problem we refuse to address—a bad habit, unresolved past experience, limiting rule/assumption, or paralyzing fear
- We build helmets around our nails instead of removing them. We protect the problem rather than solve it
- Two reasons we don't remove nails: (1) We haven't admitted the problem exists—speak your truth out loud, that's half the battle. (2) Life will get worse first before it gets better
- Everything you want is on the other side of worse first. Everything you want is on the other side of what you fear right now. The thing you fear is where your work is

It's not about the nail—but until you admit you have one and accept temporary discomfort, you stay stuck.

Promise 3: Go All In Now

- The biggest trap is being hedged—one foot in, one foot out, waiting for the perfect moment. Most people spend their lives here, never fully committing. This wastes enormous energy
- The two most dangerous words: 'Not now.' Your inner critic doesn't say give up, it says wait—get more experience, confidence, money, approval. This is just fear in another form
- We say 'I'll start living when...' (loans paid, more experience, confidence, visa, kids grown). There's always a new condition. 'Not now' turns into never
- You with energy, all in, as long as it takes—that's enough. You don't need anything else. This is the most powerful force that exists
- When you go all in, your identity shifts. The conflict between voices dissipates because fear lays down its sword. You stop spending energy fighting yourself

Burnout doesn't come from doing something a long time—it comes from friction, stress, being out of alignment. Energy is abundant like love: the more you tap into it, the more you have.